(Reuter's Service to the China Mail.)

PRINCE OF WALES.

H.R.H. ARRIVES IN EGYPT.

LONDON, June 9.

The Prince of Wales landed from the "Renown" without ceremony at four in the afternoon and boarded the train for Cairo. Five air force machines hovered over Nefise while the Prince descended from the train and shook hands with British officers and the Egyptian Governor of Iemalis who had assembled there to greet him. The Prince reached Cairo at nine o'clock and was welcomed by a distinguished gathering. He moored immediately to the Residency.

RUBBER RESTRICTIONS.

A DUTCH PROPOSAL.

WILHELMSTADT, June 9.

Mr. Helfferich, director of the Straits Scindia syndicate at Batavia, when interviewed, strongly supported the restriction and stabilisation of the rubber output through co-operation under government control. He advocated three separate co-operating pools for Malaya, the Dutch Indies and Ceylon as selling organisations with authority to stop tapping in estates showing the highest cost within separate spheres, such estates however, to remain members of the pools and share the profits. He declared that these proposals would result in a simultaneous decrease in production and average costs.

REPARATIONS PUZZLE.

BANKERS GIVE IT UP.

PARIS, June 9.

The bankers committee this afternoon resolved that no decision could be taken in view of the present circumstances regarding the raising of an international loan to cover Germany's reparation payments. The committee therefore adjourned for 3 months after which they will resume the discussion.

THE INDIAN MONSOON.

SINGAPORE, June 9.

The monsoon forecast states that the rainfall in North West India is likely to be about normal but will probably exceed normal in the peninsula while the indications respecting the rest of India are conflicting.

"BOLTON CASTLE" BREAKS DOWN.

LONDON, June 9.

The British steamer "Bolton Castle" bound from Shanghai to New York has arrived at Aden with machinery trouble and will remain there five days.

DRINKS IN LINERS.

COMMANDERS' POWERS TO CLOSE BARS.

A new rule appears in the information for passengers issued by one of the leading Transatlantic liner companies:

The bars in the first class will not be open later than 11.30 p.m., and in the second class not later than 11 p.m., but it is within the discretion of the commander to close them during the voyage at any time should he consider this course desirable.

It is understood that this announcement is due to "incidents" which have occurred since the war through the action of a small minority of passengers in liners, and it has been felt necessary to give this small minority a gentle reminder of the powers possessed by the commander of the ship.

"Commanders have always had these powers," said a sea-going official yesterday, "but possibly a great many of the travelling public do not know it. Soon after the war, and with the advent of Prohibition in the United States, the 'jollification' by some passengers outside the 3-miles limit, off New York, especially in liners bound for Europe, has occasionally passed seemingly beyond, and for the comfort and convenience of other passengers commanders have felt constrained to exercise their powers to close the bar. This warning is meant merely for the 'too merry' minority."

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA GLEE CLUB.

The University of California Glee Club which was last in Hongkong during the summer of 1920 is arriving on the s.s. "Empress of Canada" on July 19. The Glee Club also have with them a No. 1 Jazz Band. Two performances will be given at the Theatre Royal on the night of July 20 and 21.

After the performances at the Theatre Royal the Glee Club will go to Canton for two nights, and gain return to Hongkong giving two more performances the nights of July 24 and 25, leaving the following day for Shanghai per the s.s. "President Wilson" formerly the s.s. "Empire State".

Among the members of the Glee Club are seven players of the University of California Baseball Team. Arrangements are being made for at least one game between the local baseball nine and the Glee Club. This game should be very interesting and will give the uninitiated a splendid opportunity to see how the national game of the United States is played.

The Glee Club is making this trip without any financial backing and consequently they are dependent upon box office receipts to defray their expenses. Therefore it is to be hoped that the public will give good support at the different performances so that Hongkong will have the pleasure of regular visits from these young college chaps who in return will give us the latest in Jazz and enable us to pass several enjoyable evenings.

HOME CRICKET.

LATEST SCORES AND RESULTS.

LONDON, June 9.

Kent, playing against Lancashire at Manchester, won on the first innings, Collins contributing 108 and Hurst 124 towards the victory. E. Tyldesley made 166 for Lancashire.

At Birmingham Yorkshire won by an innings and 152 runs, Holmes, for the winners, scoring 209 and Oldroyd 138 not out. Rhodes took 9 wickets for 59 runs.

Playing against the home team at Leicester Surrey won by six wickets, Hobbs making 145 in the first innings. For Leicestershire Mountney, in the second innings, made 131 unfinished.

Somerset won by 55 runs from Derbyshire at Taunton. Morton, for the losers, took 12 wickets at a cost of 108 runs.

At Swansea Northamptonshire beat Glamorgan by 103 runs. In the victors second innings Denton scored 130 not out and for Glamorgan Bates made 117 not out.

Madleybone beat Scotland by an innings and 183 runs. For the M.C.C. Russell who scored 138 in the first innings is the first to complete his thousand runs this season. Fitzmaurice and Carr, for the victors, were respectively responsible for compiling 139 and 135. Ferguson, batting for Scotland, made 103 not out.

IRISH NEGOTIATIONS.

SUBSTANTIAL PROGRESS MADE.

LONDON, June 9.

It is officially stated that substantial progress has been made in connection with the Irish negotiations. COLLINS UTTERS A WARNING.

LONDON, June 10.

Mr. Collins, speaking at Dublin to-night said the people of the Free State should not be in the hands of their enemies who created an artificial situation on the Fermanagh-Donegal border with certain powerful elements. England had agents in the North-East whose policy was not merely to destroy the Irish republic or the Irish Free State but to restore their ascendancy all over Ireland and restore the Act of Union. The present was not the time to take on a war with North East Ireland and the British Empire as well. He counselled patience and not to allow themselves to be rushed into a wrong policy.

CHURCH NOTES.

TRINITY SUNDAY.

The formal celebration of this Festival of Trinity is of Western observance (the Eastern Church celebrating on this day the "Feast of all the Martyrs"), and of comparative late date. The day was originally simply the Octave of Whit Sunday; but in the Sacramentary of Gregory the original of our present Collect is given, and this perhaps indicates an informal appropriation of the day of contemplation of the mystery of the Holy Trinity. The earliest formal notice of the Festival in England is in 1162; but it is notable that the Sarum Use in the previous century numbers the succeeding Sundays as "after Trinity," whereas in the present Greek and Roman Use they are numbered as "after Pentecost." The Synod of Arles in 1260 consecrated the day of the Holy Trinity, and the universal observance of the day as Trinity Sunday was sanctioned by John xxii. (1334). It fifty sums up the whole series of Festivals of the Manifestation of God in Christ.

To-morrow is also the Feast of St.
Barnabas. The surname 'Barnabas', 'Son of Exhortation', was given to Joseph, a Levite of Cyprus, the first giver of the price of his land to the Christian community. We read of him afterwards as the introducer of St. Paul after his conversion to the brethren at Jerusalem; and as his companion at the preaching at Antioch, in the mission with aims to Jerusalem, in the first missionary journey to Cyprus, and Asia Minor, and at the Council at Jerusalem. Afterwards (see Gal. ii. 13) he is carried away (as Antioch by the dissemination of the Judaizers, and so separated from St. Paul, and, on the eve of the second missionary journey, has contention with him about John Mark, and is parted from him, and so passes out of the history.

Of his subsequent life we have no historical record, or even trustworthy tradition. But it is believed that he was stoned to death at Salamis, in Cyprus, and his body is said to have been discovered there in the fifth century, and translated to a great basilica built in his honor. There is existent an Epistle bearing his name, evidently spurious, though of early date. Tertullian ascribes to him the authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

Next Saturday is St. Alban's Day according to old tradition he was the first martyr of Britain.

He is described as a young Roman officer in the days of Diocletian, who sheltered a Christian priest, and was converted by him. Enabling him to escape, and yet a catechumen, offering himself boldly as a Christian to martyrdom, he was scourged and led leader at Verulamium, A. D. 303.
There the great Benedictine Abbey of St. Alban's, holding precedence of all others, stands around. The whole tradition is late and the Diocletian persecution prevailed but little in Britain (then under the rule of Constantine). But it is difficult to suppose that in it there is no element of historic truth. In the old Sarum and Modern Roman calendars St.
Alban's Day is the 22nd. Probably the variation is due to a confusion between the two dates in Roman numerals (xxii and xxiii).

The Lord Bishop returned during the week from his visit to Shanghai and the North.

The interchange of pulpits between Anglican priests and Non-conformist ministers is proving not too desirable a practice which has come into vogue in these days, so much so, that those in authority are finding it necessary to formulate definite rules concerning the question.

It is a great mistake for any of us to think that we can show our friendliness with our non-conformist brother ministers by attempting to do the same in our churches. The fact that there are places of worship other than Episcopal Churches means that we have different religious principles, and this fact is not affected however much love we have for others who believe different beliefs, and however much we show it. If we pretend we have differences we merely act a lie. In the Southwark Diocese the following rules are being laid down by the Diocesan:

"I can therefore only give permission to a non-conformist minister to preach in our Churches under the following conditions:—viz. that the service to which he is invited is not one of the regular services of the Church, and that he is known to be in real sympathy with the zeal of union set forth in the Lambeth Appeal; this permission is not intended to be granted to those who merely wish vaguely for remission. It is limited to those who genuinely accept the principles of the Appeal.
In the case of an invitation from a non-conformist minister to one of our clergy to preach, before I give permission it should also have to be assured that the incumbent of the parish in which the Chapel is situated has been consulted and has given his permission. I ask incumbents neither to give nor to accept such invitations without first consulting me."

The bad distribution of money in the Church and the consequent inadequacy of the stipends of the junior clergy is found in places other than England. In South Africa, for instance, things are so bad that it has been necessary to institute a determined effort at reformation, otherwise some of the younger clergy (especially those married) would have to take up secular work.
Various devices are being tried, way towards schemes for establishing central diocesan funds for the payment of the stipends of the clergy; on a fixed scale, with allowances for wife and children. The Pretoria diocese, under Bishop Fynn, was the pioneer in this matter. The diocese of Natal, George, and Grahamstown are now moving. Certainly reform is needed.

In some of the older dioceses, which have endowments, matters are very unsatisfactory. In one district the priest of the Mother-church receives an income of well over £1,000 a year, while his neighbour priest, with a wife and eight children to support, has to attempt to live on £250 a year.

Writing on the subject of Prohibition in Canada in an English weekly, "Canadian" tries to show how the effort to stop the drinking of strong drink is failing as badly in our dominion as in the States. Surely enough every Churchman would like to see the civilised world become more sober, but few are convinced that the present methods being adopted are in any sense satisfactory—secret drinking is being firmly established, and any hidden vice is likely to be far more injurious than open vice, whether one thinks of the individual or the nation.
Speaking with special reference to his own district, "Canadian" says:—

The places I know are not improving in any way under prohibition. As an illustration, may I submit a few facts concerning a valley running for a hundred miles or so north of Ottawa.
The population, numbering several thousand, is made up for the main part of farmers, lumbermen, and storekeepers, largely English and French Canadian. Church of England folk, Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, and Methodists, all flourish.
There are one or two small towns with a population varying from seven hundred to about three thousand. Total prohibition reigns supreme. With what result? To the casual visitor it would appear a wonderful success.

There is not an open saloon in the valley, the bars have been swept away, and a "drunk" on the streets of our villages is a rare sight. But let the visitor stay a few months. He will then see the ugly side of things.
In the place of the saloon and bar has sprung into existence the hidden "still" and filthy drinking den.
These "blind pigs," as they are called, simply cover the valley. Every community has not just one or two, but often up to fifty. There are few "drunks" on the streets and roads simply because old stables have been set apart for their use. There they lie until they are more or less sober. In this town at Railhead, the headquarters of our mission, every hotel except one is a "blind pig," and we have no less than forty-five rotten little "shacks" in which men can stay and drink themselves insensible. Our population is less than three thousand, so it is obvious that under properly controlled licences we should not have fifty-five saloons in such a small town. The conditions throughout the whole valley are very similar.

Sickness and death after visits to drinking dens are not uncommon.
For the women and children suffer more, especially in a severe winter.
Yet there is no official inquiry and nobody punished.

Above all, the deceit, bribery (even of police) and consequent contempt for law, which is steadily spreading, is not raising the character of the people.

ADVERSARIA

Just as the young man SPIRIT could not make love properly because (as he told FLESH the lady) he had a gum-boil, so last week I somewhat shared my story—skipping much, and made dry reading of it because of a private trouble. Excuse me, won't you?

My next camp was at Burnham Beeches, between BUCKS, FARNHAM (BUCKS, not Surrey) and Beaconsfield.
The place was as pretty as the name.
It may sound unattractive, maybe, but the beech is my favourite tree.
You may talk of your English oak all you want to, and 'tis surely a noble tree, especially when grown in deep clay; but I do think the beech is very English, typically English, a homey tree. It is likewise in all ways more beautiful, whether you regard the contour, the foliage in mass, the bark, or the spreading limbs of it. The word "beech" is the same as "book" in old Saxon, because, they say, the old trees were written on their boards of this wood. Prior traces to them of the Sanscrit. An old English name for the fruit was "beek," which may account for Buckinghamshire, which of all the counties seems to specialize in beeches—though we grow fine ones in Cumberland, let me tell you. Some people extract cooking oil from the fruit of the beech. When I was a boy I ate much of it; but the dream I dreamed under beeches I remember best. So, after two nights in this camp, resulting in disappointment, and thinking how good God was to make England just like that, I pulled my home up the long hill to Beaconsfield.

At an inn near the foot, where I fortified myself with the usual foaming tankard, the innkeeper told me I would "ave it hall up 'ill to Beckonsfield"—an illustration of our common English way of altering place names.
He had an infant in his arms, a small boy by his leg, and two little maids standing near, wearing once white and now otherwise combination garments, consisting of bodice and what I may term lower sleeves. They looked cool. I thought how blessed is the man that hath his quiverful, and lo! two more little maids appeared (numbered by cries of "come and see the kitten"). They were rubbing their eyes as if just up. It was about eight a.m. That made six, a fine collection of healthy looking youngsters, and I had just counted when I saw two small boys in the lobby. I said to him: "Fine lot of bairns, master.
All yours?"

"Aye," he said, "but I've a daughter in service, and a lad serving his time at the tailoring. And mother, she has the baby in the kitchen, sir." He was evidently proud of his Roosevelian virtues.

As I climbed the long hill, I thought: Beaconsfield. Of course.
Naturally a beacon would be high up.
But why do all the natives call it Beckon? Was that the older pronunciation? After all, there is a relation of meaning between "beconing" and signalling by beacon.

Then a workman offered to give me a push up the hill, remarking that I didn't look as if I were used to such hard work.
I thanked him cordially, but declined his assistance. "If I get help," I said, "I lose my bet."
"Ah," said he, approval writ large upon his face. "I thought it was summat like that. Thinks I, no man's going to play a mug's game like that 'cept for a bet or something." That's what I got for my deceitful pretence of "being a sportsman." Served me quite right, didn't it?

There was a cornfield with about an acre or so of poppies sown, unrelieved by a hint of wheat. Beyond it a beechwood for background. The eye seemed unlikely ever to have enough of that scarlet. We pulled into a gateway recess, to sit and smoke and behold it.

This, we said in our diary, is Gorgeousness. "Around and about us ancient beeches, their smooth bark old gold in colour, in the dim light that filters through their stooping boughs. Zephyrus, gentlest and kindest of aylvan deities, hums his song of the seasons past present, and to come, and a wandering humbler e (more pompos than humble) obliges with an obligato in deep bass. Far off and faint, a thrush, not satisfied with the flood of melody of the morn-ing's mistins, sings, as though rehearing his melodious solo. Beech leaves are translucently green, and we get sensation as of stained glass, soothingly green, here in this verdant chapel erected to the glory of Pan.
Fallen from our shoulders, as Ben-yan's pilgrim's staff, is every ounce of care and worry; our soul is "born again"; we have a strange feeling that thus and only thus have we existed from the beginning of things, and that we have awakened from a some vague, disturbing dream of a world where strangely foolish people buy and sell in "dusty, dry places, looking at each other askance. Great Pan, we dumbly cry—and Zephyrus stays his cadence in a hush as of awe—grant us this boon that never more may we dream such dreams, but ever awake to sure consciousness that thou art thou and we wholly thine.
Here in thy sanctuary, O Pan, we swear—

Damn the flies!"
Of course there were flies.
Rhapsodizing in a scriptorium about summer in the country, a man is apt to forget the flies. Here they would not let us. There is one, a sort of gadfly, I suppose, from a third to half an inch long, his abdomen marked like that of a Ligurian bee, and his wings beautifully diaphanous, which upon one unawares, like first love, and, like the strong wine that is a mocker, at the last he biteth like an adder, and we swear, and flick away his bloodswollen corpse, and chafe the wound, and all the poetic flapdoodle that we were charged with, like a syphon, goes fizzy.

At Beaconsfield, where I MEET we took in ale, baccy, AN and water, we made the ARTIST acquaintance of a peripatetic artist, educated (so he said) as a Bluecoat, brought up as a jockey, and now taken to Art.
He had "choobs" and canvasses with him, and confided, that his specialty was "painting 'osces." It was an advantage, as he explained, that he enjoyed over many R.A.'s, that he really knew the points of a 'orse.
Maybe I saw the new White 'Ose at Somthingham? He painted that, from an 'unter he knew, and getting passing all said as whoever painted it know'd a 'orse all right. His missus was travelling with him, had a few things to sell. No licence though, and hoped she wouldn't get pinched.
There she was, now, talking to a old toff. Thanks, mate. I haven't had the old pipe filled, ye may say, for a week, and good baccy is meat and drink to a man like me. Well, if you're moving on, good luck, mate. I leep' out last night—wish we had a boutful like that nobby one o' yours. I'm trying to get lodgings here to-night.
I think I can sell a picture 'ere, I I . . . . . luck, mate.

The garrulous little man seemed to enjoy the sound of his own voice, snatches of which continued to reach me as I moved away. These hills that I was now climbing were as trying as the Mendips had been, though I was now stronger and better able to attack them. They were the Chilterns, "for which," as I humorously remarked at the time, "I would not apply again."

My diary refers to a LAPSEUS "adventures with mad man, who thought me warder in pursuit of him." I recall nothing of it now, and suppose it may have been a note for jokes. But I do remember spending some hours in an orchard with a maiden who fed me with cherries, and detained me in talk so that my mileage was no more than one per hour for that day. I record a good night's sleep in a camp half a mile out of the very old-fashioned village of Amersham.
Here (it that village) I read the following, alarming notice on a board:

The Magistrates acting for this Hundred have given premptury Orders to the Constables and other Peace Officers to Apprehend all Common Beggars, Balled Beggars and other Vagrants for that they may be Dealt with according to Law.

The clean collar of the Sunday morn, and perhaps the moonlight, eyed me from arrest. I filled my kettle and sat at the pump in the old Tollbooth—or Tithebarn, and passed through in safety. The Duchess had been complaining bitterly about this innovation of starting without breakfast, so as soon as we got into green parts again, we stopped and had it.

I also washed a shirt and some socks, and hung 'em up in the sun, already powerful at 7.30 a.m. This was on the main road to Aylesbury. Soon we turned off into a narrow lane, shaded by great trees, and climbed to a plateau leading down to Cheshunt.
At the top was a little bit of common, carrying a notice-board saying that "Cheshunt, Lord of the Manor" would prosecute any person camping on it.
Now if there be one thing that must not appear in these papers, that thing is certainly politics. I think of old England and its highway rights, but no, I don't. Let me think of the England that was before the lords and other great landowners impudently and by knavery (see Parliamentary records) stole most of the commons.
(A common is a bit of "waste" land for common use.) For the man who stole a goose from a common there was the pillory, the lash, the jail.
For the man who stole the common from the goose Nemesis is still on the way. I hope he'll hurry. But as for Lord Cheshunt, who assumes rights over a common that he hasn't even troubled to steal, what shall I say?
That is purely rhetorical. You needn't tell me. I said it at the time, not for publication, but as a guarantee of sincere feeling. As for his threat, I did camp for some hours on that bit of grass. I knocked my pipe out on it, and in other ways disrespectfully asserted my right on it.

Always I was more leisurely on Sundays than on other days, sometimes not walking at all. On this one, instead of using my tiny stove, I gathered dried sticks for a cooking fire, for I love "the crackling of thorns under a pot"—and baked potatoes in the red embers. They came out floury and delicious. There were other courses, but the spuds were the best. Then the Duchess went into the hedge a-hunting, and I spent the afternoon lying on my back, studying gnats.
There were eight manoeuvring, about seven feet from the ground, and never more than a foot to eighteen inches from the end of a bough of wychhazel.

Do you know how to pronounce "wyh"? I don't.
They hovered, sometimes making a constellation like Urs Major, and once in a while, say twice a minute, they "trod the mazy figure" of a dance. At these times they seemed to be colliding. Suddenly I stared hard, rubbed my eyes. There were nine. Whence the new chum? I had counted them carefully, more than once. (I learned, as a boy, to count the "heads" of a large flock of sheep racing past. It's a knack.) Presently the nine became seven, then eight again, then as low as five. Finally I discovered the reason. I can only describe it as a series of marriages and divorces in mid-air. But whether five or nine, the mazy movement went on for ever.

I thought (Heaven only knows why) of the wife MAN who complained that her AND husband's jealousy made WOMAN her wretched. Her friend:
"But has his jealousy no foundation?" The wife: "Of course not.
He suspects the wrong man."

Then I slept.
I was awakened some time after by the rumble of a deep bass voice. Long before the speaker came into view round the bend of the road, I heard it. "Bumbling. There was a woman with him a woman of about forty, still with the remains of a handsome face. She wore a natty sailor blouse and short skirt. They were talking earnestly, the man wheeling a bicycle.
She swinging her arms. They checked the debate when they saw us, and while they passed. A little further on, but out of sight behind my screen of brambles, their foot-steps stopped.
The rumble was renewed. Presently the woman returned, passed with her face averted, but I could see she was weeping silently. A little beyond, I saw her with the backs of her hands dash the drops from her eyes. The man must have mounted his bicycle, for I never heard his heavy tread again. She walked listlessly, with back slightly bowed, toward Cheshunt.
Was it a parting? Or a misunderstanding?

O men, O women! How you need each other, how you misunderstand each other, how you grieve each other —and generally it is trifles that spoil the fast picture of your happiest relations. So soliloquizing, I got up and made tea. A jark sang. The Duchess purred. In my ear was the drowsy hum of insects. The leaves of the oak just aghast for the passing of a baby breeze. The sky was leaning like as hard as ever it could.

Berkhamstead is a busy looking town, of good appearance, and very wide streets but we stopped only long enough to buy bread, cheese, butter, tomatoes, milk &c. We like not towns. School children in hundreds, walking two and two, punctuated by teachers, attracted our notice. We asked the provision merchant if there was "anything special on."
"No," he said; "they're going to church."

He said it as if it is quite the thing for school children to attend church at 9.15 on a Monday morning, so we abandoned the investigation.
Through Northchurch we went, and so to Ting—the cleanest and handsomest little town we had seen so far. (in 260 miles) clustered about a great park.
This main highway was left at Aston Clinton, a thriving city containing three cottages, one barn, and an inn, and were now in Hert. We had been in Hert, further back, but diverged into Bucks again.
The black line on our map had some curious twists in it, as it lengthened day by day. We entered a very lonely, a very curvy, a very narrow, but a very charming country road which led to Irvinghoe. On the way was a sort of lake, in which we could not resist the temptation to swim. There were no houses near, but something that looked like a bathing hut on the farther shore. Our tent was under two enormous willow trees. The willow's foliage is the nearest thing England has to bamboo.
I've never seen—and I know rural England as few Englishmen can know it—such big willow trees anywhere before. The Duchess having younger eyes than mine, I made her look as high as she could. Then I started looking where she left off, and looked up, and still there were green willow boughs reaching skywards.

So far I had met only one of our landed gentry. He was on horseback, and he pulled up, and he said:
"You mustn't camp here! We cannot have people like you loitering about the place."

Me: When you say "we," what am I to understand? That you are a monarch, an editor, or that you have a worm?

He puffed his cheeks and made a noise I cannot possibly spell. Said he would not tolerate being addressed so impudently. That he was a magistrate, and—

An ominous hiatus.
I smiled as sweetly as I could,
(and there have been women who said I smile a nice smile).
"Look here," I said. "Don't be a pompous ass. You've shown your authority. I've had my little joke.
You know, I know, very well, that I've as much right here as you have.
So long as I keep my side of your hedges, you mind your own business, and I'll mind mine."

I had more to say, but he was riding away before I could get it out.
He was (as I guessed from the numerous notice boards dotted about, with the name on it) a Captain so and-so with a hyphen. Somebody should knock his outlet-head hard with the latest edition of Stone's Justice's Manual. What it must be to be a tramp "without visible means."

One keeper's range out THEN A of concealment and KEEPER. truculently demanded of me if I had a white cat as well as that one indicating the Duchess. I asked him in return, first screwing in my monocle (the glass out of a no-good watch) where he thought I was to sleep, if I filled up my carapace with white cats. I said I hadn't a white cat, and wouldn't have a white cat, because white cats are all deaf, and I wanted somebody to talk to, beside keepers, I carried a yellow one.

He changed his tone. He even said "Sir" as he explained that a white cat had been about among the young pheasants, and he thought, seeing I had one, etc.

shoes. Fair she was, with golden hair neatly coiled, and perfect features.
On the greensward by the road she saw a pair of clumsy, dusty boots, a reeking pipe, and a set of torpelo rhin-furs, all pointing to "set fair." Then she saw they were essential portions of a man, lying flat on his stomach on the convex part of him. Near him was an enamelled pint mug, a torn tobacco pouch, a saucer with milk in it, a tin kettle, the remains of a loaf, and a curious looking hut on wheels. The man was attired in a pair of very shabby pants and a grey flannel shirt, open at the throat, and with sleeves folded above the elbow.
His arms were sunburnt. He looked a cross between Buffalo Bill and a stage bandit.

She jumped from her bicycle, and in a voice that was hushed music, cried, "O, the darling!" The man turned his head, looked, and (so he thinks) he blushed.
But it was the cat she meant. The Duchess walked toward her, being partial to females, and was picked up and caressed.

"The beautiful girl looked doubtfully at the man. He rose, lugged off his hat, MM smiled, but said nothing.
"I hope you won't mind, but I do so love kittens, and yours is such a beautiful one I—I hope you are kind to it."

"Ma'mzelle" said the man (isn't it rotten that there's no decent English form of addressing a person to whom you haven't been introduced?) "I can only say that I—I love it."
"What a perfectly splendid idea," she said, after I'd explained the carapace, the cat, and the whole business. I hope I didn't look and talk like a blithering ass, but I tell you that lady's charm fairly bowled me over. I don't think I've ever seen, and I'm sure I never talked with, a more perfect example of English grit and presentness, with a kiss for the Duchess, and a nod and smile for me that settled my business, she rode on. I "tiffed" myself a bit, hoping to impress her more favorably on her return; but she did not come back. I never saw her again, yet I see her always.

Next morning I found a network of byroads, and the Grad Junction CORKERS Canal. At Irvinghoe, an uninteresting hamlet set on bare hills, our road curved sharply southwards, though marked straight on the map.
Presently it resumed the northing business, and led us over a grand pass, with sweeping views all round of fruitful country.

At the "Travellers' Rest" inn, a lonely house, I had two pints of ale, the landlord informing me that "other writing gentlemen" spoke highly of it. He had seen me entering up my log. After a search, he produced a copy of a "poem," beginning:

Upon the Chilterns stood an Inn Both picturesque and old.
Cory and warm it looked within,
Outside 'twas wet and cold.
Above the door a creaking sign Was swinging to and fro, It said the liquors sold were fine And came from Irvinghoe.

There were four other stanzas. The subject was finer than the verse. The landlord refused to take any money for a baby chicken that the Duchess feloniously and of malice aforethought did kill and murder. Dunstable began just over the crest of the hill, and we thought, as it was four o'clock, to have tea at the first inn, and pass through to Luton afterwards. It was the first on the right as you enter Dunstable from Irvinghoe and I want you to remember and avoid it, for they refused to supply tea, on the plea that "mother was busy." I made tea in camp, later, outspanning in the country just west of Luton, and we were both disgruntled, the Duchess sulked over the delay, and I hating Dunstable with a triple ban. It was the least picturesque camp we ever had, with no view worth sketching; but we slept well, and were afoot at six, and through Luton before eight.
This is a much larger town than we expected, almost a city: it's the place where they make the panamahs, you know.

Thus it seemed that this night I had slept in Beds. (Bedfordshire). Next day, for the fourth or fifth time, I was in Herts, again. Passed through Lilley and Offley (which I feebly diaried as "offey pretty") to the undoubtedly ugly little town of Hitchin. Ugly name, ugly place.

It was awfully hot. The wax candle in the lantern bent and drooped until it was S shaped. When I looked at it again it was a pool of liquid fat, dripping up to the bed. This was at Offley, so now we know the derivation of the common English expression, "Offley hot." It was so hot that even the kitten began to melt.
At least, she left a yellow mark on my blanket, which is strong circumstantial evidence, she being a yellow cat.

We camped on the Cambridge road, just in time to get all gear under cover before a tremendous thunderstorm burst. The Duchess was frightened, so loud, so near, the thunder seemed.
A heavy rain was followed by a smart shower of remarkably big hailstones. I had my bare feet out at the door to let the rain wash 'em hot to me, and one hailstone hit my big toe so severely that I felt the pain of it for an hour after.

Now is it time for a NATURE NOTE (something like those you get in a corner of the editorial page of ha'penny papers of large circulation).
I copy it as it was made at the time.

Earwigs are bloody-minded pirates.
A troop of them has invaded the carapace; the battle is still raging; but if we are defeated, we shall have sold our lives dearly. The carapace has been unspeakable. They sent spies before the battalions. The Duchess caught one, and (having more sense than I) was holding a court-martial, when I interceded, reproved her for cruelty, and removed the prisoner gently, quoting "Kim":
"Go in peace, little brother. We be of one people, thou and I." To the Duchess I said, severely, "I would not enter on my list of friends, the man who needlessly sets foot upon a worm: nor love a cat who tortures dear little earwigs merely for the joy of seeing them squirm." (Part of that poemlet is original) When the main body of the enemy arrived, they conducted their operations in a cowardly, treacherous, unbrithish fashion. One detachment crept up my trouser leg, but that was an ambush as it happened. They were wiped out. The main body went into laager in the mattress, and others in the cooking utensils.
After a sort of Spion Kop affair, in which we slew about 8,430, more or less, there has been a whole day of guerrilla warfare. The Duchess attends to the snipers: I am scouting for the positions of the main bodies. Our present plan of campaign is to clear at any cost the camp. The Duchess tells me that earwigs are hypocrites who never wash themselves. I won't go so far myself: I dare say some are decent fellows; but I must treat them as trespassers. Possibly, horrid thought, some of the land owners regard me and my like as earwigs.

One thing I noticed which is oddly like the old joke of the two asses at a fence each eating grass out of the other donkey's field. Say I camped between two towns half a dozen miles apart. At what I believe is technically called "knocking off time," would see a stream of young men and women cycling or walking in both directions. Thus many Hitch people go to work at Baldock, a vice versa. As they passed I would hear comments, as they discovered my carapace shrinking shyly in hedge or under a tree.

"Wot the—'s this 'ere?" Then "the loud laugh that spethe vacant mind." There were temptations like "e aint forgot-ting his cat with 'im." By far favourite remark (I must have hit over a hundred times) was "it up thy bed and walk." It was in-gratifying to me to find the script which I have done so much to minimize, familiar in the minds months of the proletariat. It did heart good. Not always do good seed fall upon parched grounds.

The ribald remarks did not mme of course. I am as nearly impervious to ridicule as a man can be.
I confess the other sort uplifted me cheered me, and gratified me made me feel more than ever vinced that I was a fellow, d-know. A young woman cycling her young man kept her eyes until it became a physical difficulty for her to turn her head without risk of strang-Then I heard her say, "What feetly splendid arrangement reconciled me for the rest of ing to the odour of methylate which was beginning to p-"goes" well enough, by it with all foods except ch-advise my readers to their cheese without mspirits. The combination is unpleasant. I do not know sensible liquor. There is nhup the small gets uneasy time, and gets up add wall in its sleep, maybe; and t-to dream that I was judg-miserably, feeling sorry, and woke up with a star-

Baldock may not be such a Sleepy the Duchess. Hollow as it looks at 7.30 a.m. At that hour, having been about since five, and at what must have been the chief hotel, I saw a really good looking wench washing the doorstep. I asked her if she had a sister in the beer department, who would render first aid to a compound third, and she proved to me that she did not yet need the services of a dentist. She was as kind as she was pretty, and went for the beer. I was in something very like a flirtation—one of the lady's hands was in mine—when there was an interruption. There was a keen mewling, and in walked the Duchess, tall, erect, looking for me. "Goodness! Wherever is that cat from! Who's it is!" exclaimed Hebe.

I confessed that she was mine. It was like admitting that I was a married man. I almost felt henpecked.

It was there that I first thought of making a book of my adventures, and illustrating it with an Ale Map of England, with good ale areas coloured pink, places of middling ale green, and spots where the ale was bad black. Royston ale was unquestionably pink. Here are miles of health, on which race horses train. Beyond that came a lovely village called Melbourn, where the majority of the houses were "batished. Something funny happened there.

I was pestered by a THE ROOZY boozey baker for my card. He said he could see I was a gentleman, and the fact that I admitted I wasn't selling anything proved it. I said:

"Do you read books?"

"Yes. Often."

"Then perhaps you've heard of Jack London?"

His face shone with awe and admiration, as well as with alcohol. "Gimme your hand. Why, I've read your last work. Let's see, what was it called?"

Hang it. I didn't know either I could only think of "Before Adam" and "White Fang" and "The Cruise of the Snark."

So I said:

"O, that last one was no good. I prefer people to admire 'Before Adam' that's the best thing I ever did."

He begged me to wait a moment, while he ran to fetch his missus. She came, a youngish, black-voiced wench. "Guess who this is," he said. And then, as one springing a big surprise: "It's Jack London."

She curtsied. Said she enjoyed my short stories best.

"Shake hands with her, Sir," cried the baker. "It'll be something for her to boast of later on."

They pressed me to remain two days for the village fair; but I wanted to get away to where it would be safe to be somebody else, for a change. So I got to a place with the curious name of "Foolmole," and there encamped.

Between Hitchin and Baldock I passed through Letchworth, the famous garden city, and forgot to mention it in passing. Here are my notes written at the time:

It is a well placed and charmingly designed collection of ornamental villas, now quite numerous. Everything at present is neat and tidy. The Garden City Co. Ltd. posts notices requesting citizens to see that trees, fences, etc. are not damaged. Judging by the public notices, for which special provision is made, it is a city of cranks. There were meetings for socialists, theosophists, and other isms. The hotel is the old manor house, done up, and run by the Company. They have their recreation ground, public seats and paths, and some sort of power-house—well away from the houses. They have to have, alas, police. The one I saw was a surly chap: didn't respond to my cheerful good morning. It isn't, however, a fair test for the Simple Life, because the two towns mentioned are so near, and all the old-fashioned amusements, including alms and kinemas, may be had for an hour's walk. I noticed, moreover, as in all other rural places, new cottages to let or to sell: first owners tired, I presume. According to a recent booming story I saw in the cocoa press, they have a communal kitchen for those who care to use it, and other socialistic experiments; but I wasn't sufficiently interested to investigate.

My socialism is wearing very thin of late. I've seen too much of socialists, I think. Also, now that I realize, after spending so many years in other people's service, that money in time, that we save money to gain time for our own spending and purpose, I am a thorough individualist with regard to the time that remains to me. I've been just a month on the roads, and that is a longer holiday than most wage-slaves get. I expect to continue for two months more.

Only the onset of winter, or some accident unforeseen, can interrupt this well-earned wanderjahr of mine. Mine, mine, mine. Aye, with a fierce jealousy, will I use and claim the remainder of my days.

"I would persuade myself that life, in the true sense, is only now beginning; that the time of sweat and fear was not life at all, and that it now only depends upon my will to lead a worthy existence. . . . If I find myself astonished at its brevity and small significance, why, that is my own fault; the voices of those gone before had sufficiently warned me."

That's Gissing. But Gissing, poor chap, had small humour, and he never went carapacing. The noon-time rest and the night repose are positive enjoyments, like theatres or other "pleasures." Refreshed by them, the sense of renewed vigour makes the exercise of it also a positive happiness. A good dinner was always an important event with me, but I know now that the sort of food matters little, provided the appetite be lusty. And as for drinking. . . . Perhaps I talk too much of ale. I do not think so much of the "social glass." The one that shines in my mind is the foaming mug that is put before one while we mop our foreheads and stretch our legs on some inn bench after a few miles in hot sunshine. First the long, glottic cooling pull; then the appreciative sips more leisurely.

After Foolmole (where a confiding man offered to pay in advance for a copy of the book he was writing!) I camped just four miles from Cambridge, after admiring the lovely village of Harston a garden town by nature.

In the early morning, at breakfast, I was joined by a tramp who proved a most entertaining fellow. Hungry, too, poor chap, having slept out on an empty stomach, and it was a wet night. I filled him with bread and cheese and cocoa. He was a journeyman printer, the old-fashioned compositor whose "occupation's gone" since the introduction of the Lino.

"Once," he said, "by working two days, and then moving on, I could make a perpetual holiday of it." Now there was little work, and the "Father of the Chapel" could not be tapped as formerly. His experiences in New York, coming for the "Herald" were amusing, but will not bear reproduction in print. He was a real old-timer, knew the history of Fleet St from the year dot, and was a genuine philosopher. He parted from me in Cambridge, taking the New-market road. I continued by Trinity and St. Johns, over the ditch they call a river, (admiring the fine exterior of the Fitzwilliam Museum) and so on to the Ely road. I always think Cambridge looks more like an ancient university town than Oxford.

More cloistral. I had but just left the city, entering the suburb called Milton, when a gale sprang up, accompanied by heavy rain. Rain is nothing, but the wind scared me. I thought my tent would carry away. I have never watched old canvas at sea more anxiously. If my roof went, not only my bed, but my books and papers, irreplaceable sketches, would be ruined. But though it flapped and belled, the good stuff held. I was in the lee of a thickset hedge. I read "Tristram Shandy," and smoked the excellent sixpenny mixture I bought in Cambridge. Balzac remarks somewhere that, though many conquests divided their land piecemeal, the solidarity of the Flemings remained owing to the tankard and the tobacco pipe. My basis was the same, and it endured.

In the morning, with promise of clear skies, I put out all my gear to air and dry in the sun. I set the pan abolling, and looked about me over an antebreakfast pipe. Then I laughed. Some people had chosen this spot during recent sunny days. I saw a red chocolate wrapper, some cigarette ends, and—the thing that made me laugh—an article I mustn't name, a refinement of civilization that is never mentioned in newspapers. What a pity, for both romance and humour were in it, in this roadside hollow half way between Cambridge and Ely. Tears consist of a little phosphate of lime, chloride of sodium, mucus, and water, all of which are respectable things. The best laughter, unfortunately, is often produced in ways that will not permit analysis.

Proceeding was now a matter of following the river Ouse, a mere stream until it broadened into a sluggish river beyond Ely. Ely Cathedral is visible plainly from Stretcham, four miles away, and thence looks about the size of a mailbox alongside Kowloon Wharf. Indeed, with its white roof broken by towers, it is not unlike a ship. The city itself did not seem large; but I believe areas lie out of sight.

Littleport is a village that has grown into a town unaware; it hardly seems to know it yet. From Littleport onwards, till we camped for the Sunday rest, the Ouse was our close companion, and we camped among its marginal reeds.

We are in a fen country now—Hilgay Fen. The prospect on all sides is very Dutch, with the river more like a canal and windmills dotted about, and the fields lower than "waterlevel. The road itself is an embankment just hereabouts. A stroll to the Post Office teaches us that the hamlet is called Brandon Creek. Talking with a farm labourer about the damage done to crops by our storm, quite a third being wasted, mostly oats and barley we happened to mention our liking for broad beans. He went away and presently another man brought a quart. We had nothing less than a shilling; he had to change: we wanted those beans, fresh pulled; so we banged the hob. It was a very serious mistake. In less than an hour, two women turned up with beans "for the artist gentleman." (We had been seen sketching the village.) Having disappointed them, visibly and audibly, we began to get nervous when a man turned up, with peas. We told him we hated peas. He went—aid came back—with more beans. As we went away from there in the morning, after a bad night due to river mist, we saw two people making towards the camp with baskets. What was in the baskets, we cannot say; but if allowed a guess, we'll hazard beans. O, and we refused an offer of hot potatoes about two in the afternoon, a full hour after lunching. It was a most hospitable hamlet. A vegetarian could be happy there.

Beautiful wooded country, on a higher level, met us as we approached Downham; and here the marks of the storm were less visible, though some trees had suffered. I felt that I had been either a hero or a fool—I never really settled which.

Dr. Johnson, "diverted of cooking with the fertility of his own fancy" (blatant old erotist) ponderously remarked that "one could say a great deal about cabbage." We cannot all be vivacious, like the heavy German baron who alarmed his hosts at Geneva by jumping over tables and chairs, and explained "sh" appears "t'retse ff." Still, I feel I could say a great deal about camp cookery, and my experiments with outlandish things, like nettles, sorrel, briar shoots, and the like. I stewed onions, a bit of hard cheese, some young shoots or wild briar, some sorrel and dandelion; and the resultant mess would have tempted a gourmet to sell his birthright. Indeed, it was tasty, and I was glad that an accidental shortage of bacon had happened to prompt the experiment. Barring bacon and eggs, I was feeding on vegetarian and fruitarian lines because it was inconvenient to carry meat in hot weather, in a "potted caravan" like mine. As it was the cheese was in a melting mood, and butter hopeless: I substituted for the latter lemon curd. Good bread with Lincolnshire lemon curd on it goes well for the afternoon snack. To read of Stefano on his Arctic journeys for some of the blubbery stuff he had to eat, and glad to get it is to realize that my carapace was a travelling Savoy. How little, ordinarily, do we realize that our joys and sorrows are magnified or diminished by attendant circumstances. I'm certain that the sight of a village pump, or a pub on a lonely road, gave me more acute pleasure than I have felt over a no trump hand at Bridge, or over an invitation to a gubernatorial luncheon.

One day when it was raining hard, a yokel and his lass went by huddled, or cuddled, under one umbrella. "What's that?" said she. "A man, in a tent, writing." What's he do it for?" said she. "He's mad," said he.

BING BOYS ON STRIKE.

The motor boat boys employed on four motors owned by Mr. George Bing, of No. 24, Canton Road, Kowloon, went out on strike at 6 p.m., yesterday without giving any reason or previous warning, leaving the boats tied up and unattended, at the Tsimshatsui Pier.

The steamship "Ardamass" arrived in port on the 8th inst. having put back owing to heavy weather.

Miss Aileen Woods will be amongst the passengers leaving for San Francisco by the a.s. "President Lincoln" on June 20. During her vacation in the States, Miss Woods will see how people are dancing over that way and when she returns to Hongkong to resume teaching with her sister, Miss Doris Woods, next October she will have all the latest steps amongst her luggage.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

My dear Children,
I wonder if any of you guessed the hidden names in the short story last week?

I am printing it again this week with the names of the boys and girls underlined. Then you can see how it is done if you have not already made out how to do it and perhaps some time later on we can have a competition.

Your loving

HIDDEN NAMES.

A small boy and girl were going for a walk in the country one day with their mother. As they went out of the front door they met the postman who handed a letter to their mother.

"It is only a bill," she said as she put it in her pocket. "I must pay it to-morrow."

"It is really May now Mother, isn't it?" asked her little boy. "And soon it will be my birthday. I hope that I shall have lots of presents."

"I expect that you will," his mother said smiling. "Now we are coming to a lane which we must go down, round the corner we come to a bridge then..."

"What shall we come to then?" interrupted her little girl.

"Have patience and you will hear," replied her mother. "I was going to say that we should come to a field full of primroses and violets. See there is a low-lying tree, she exclaimed, pointing to a tiny bird sitting on a bough. "Look how it bobs up and down."

Her son turned round to look at it when a soldier coming along caught his eye.

"Look Mother," he whispered. "He has a Sam Browne and a sword and a pistol. Doesn't he look a dandy?"

"I think he looks a guy," his sister put in rather rudely. "He walks so funny."

"You must not speak about anyone like that," reproved her mother. "Especially as you are not very graceful yourself. But come now children. Here is the field."

It was full of lovely flowers and they all spent a very happy afternoon there.

SNIP AND SNOP MAKE THEMSELVES USEFUL.

Mary went out shopping one day and she took Snip and Snop with her as a great treat. As a rule they were left behind because they did not like to wait long outside the shops and sometimes when Mary took them in with her they hunted out cats from underneath the counters and then there was trouble. You know how there were nearly always cats underneath the shop counters and Snop did not approve of these animals and only liked their own cat Snorrum.

But that day Mary had only to go to two shops and as she was inside for not more than three or four minutes the dogs waited patiently for her and afterwards they all went to have some buns and milk. This was what they always enjoyed especially as they did not go with Mary often.

"Now doggies," said Mary when they had finished. "Off we go home and as you have been very good you may carry my parcels." They thought this great fun and trotted along by Mary each with a parcel held carefully in his mouth until they were at home again.

"Here are your parcels Mother," cried Mary as they went in and Snip and Snop laid them down at her feet.

"Yes Mother," answered Mary then, as she put her hand in her pocket, she exclaimed "Oh my parcels are gone! I must have dropped it on the way back."

"What a pity," said her mother. "And it is your new purse too."

"Yes," poor Mary said, nearly crying. "And it had all my birthday money in it."

"Well perhaps we can find it," replied her mother comfortingly. "Let us all have a good hunt."

They all went out to look for the lost purse and Snip whispered to Snop. "Come along we will race on ahead because unless we are quick someone may come and find it up to us."

SHOOTING OUTRAGE.

ARMED ROBBER IN WYNDHAM STREET.

PURSUERS FIRED ON.

A robber armed with a revolver, which he did not hesitate to use in order to make good his escape, made his appearance in Wyndham Street last night. Shortly after 9 o'clock Mrs. Blake, proprietress of the Wyndham Hotel, left this building to proceed to the Star Ferry. On her arm she carried a rain coat, beneath which was concealed a handbag. This latter fortunately contained nothing but a few dollars, a pair of spectacles and a bunch of keys. Mrs. Blake had only gone a few yards from the hotel when she met a Chinese, well dressed in a white suit. This man made a grab at the raincoat. Mrs. Blake immediately commenced to struggle with him, and the handbag was revealed. This the thief snatched, breaking off the handles and proceeded up Wyndham Street towards the Dairy Farm.

By this time Mrs. Blake's screams had attracted attention and as the robber came opposite the hotel some of the residents went out to give chase. The fugitive turned down by the Dairy Farm with Mr. John Cameron about five yards behind. Suddenly the robber turned and fired with his revolver. The shot missed and the chase continued by the Masonic Hall. Here Mr. Cameron found himself becoming exhausted and shouted for the man to be stopped. Outside the Carlton Hotel were seated two gentlemen who saw the man running down the hill pursued by a soldier and two policemen. They joined in the chase. When the robber was opposite the lower door of the hotel he again turned and fired. The bullet missed one of the pursuers very narrowly and hit the wall. Another shot was fired a little later and then a gun was produced by one of the men but before this could be used the fugitive had reached Queen's Road and was lost to sight.

Late last night detectives found the spectacles which had been in the bag. They were picked up in Ice House Street. So far no arrest has been made.

it is lying on the path and Mary and her mother cannot go as fast as we can.

"All right," agreed his brother and they raced along like the wind looking from side to side as they went.

When they had gone about halfway Snop who was in front called out. "Hurrah! I have found it. Here it is on the side of the path."

And there sure enough lay the new grey suede purse.

"Shall I carry it back?" suggested Snop but Snip answered, "No I don't think you had better touch it. It looks so new and if you carried it in your mouth you might mark it and if you took it between your paws you might make it muddy. You wait here Snop and I will run back and fetch Mary."

And this is what he did. As soon as he saw Mary he caught hold of her skirt very gently because Mary did not like being pulled about.

"What is it Snip?" she asked looking down at him.

"Wont!" he barked (Come with me and I will show you).

"I do believe my clever dogs have found it," said Mary and she and her mother hurried along until they came to Snop who was standing guard over the purse. When he saw her he danced round in circles and Mary too jumped for joy.

"You are good dogs," she cried. "Come along home and have some lumps of sugar," and when they were back again she gave them each four big lumps as a reward.

"We must try and find something else another day," said Snop, munching away happily and Snip thought too that that was quite a good idea!

MRS. PATRICK CAMPBELL.

MR. SHAW'S RHYMED TRIBUTE.

To those personal and highly intimate autobiographies which find abundant readers these days Mrs. Patrick Campbell adds "My Life and Some Letters." A first part of the book appears in the Queen's early summer number, that journal having secured the English serial rights. There are piquant letters forthcoming addressed to Mrs. Patrick Campbell by Mr. George Bernard Shaw, and two or three letters from Sir James Barrie. For an example may be cited this entirely characteristic avowal by Mr. Shaw:

"O, glorious, white marble lady, what was done to me in my childhood was just nothing at all of an intentional kind. I wasn't spoiled, and wasn't helped. No direct ill-treatment was added by anybody to the horrors of the world. Nobody forbade me to discover what I could of its wonders. I was taken-and took myself-for what I was; a disagreeable little beast. Nobody concerned himself or herself as to what I was capable of becoming, nor did I. I did not know I was different from other people (except for the worse); far from being conceited, I hadn't even common self-respect. I have discovered all my powers from the outside, with incredulous astonishment, or rather, I have discovered that everybody else hasn't got them. My shyness and cowardice have been beyond belief. "G.B.S."

And the following rhymed tribute to Mrs. Campbell reveals "G.B.S." in a somewhat unexpected vein:

Who mashed Stella?
I, that rejoice
In a nice Irish voice, I mashed Stella.

Who made her smile?
Dis very child,
With my winks and my wile, I made her smile.

Who'll be her man?
Why, he that can,
Apollo or Pan,
I'll be her man.

Who is a fool?
I, as a rule (The happiest of 'em), I am a fool.

Who is her friend?
Stella's true friend,
World without end,
I am her friend.

In her stage life, since the creation of Paula Tiquera, Mrs. Patrick Campbell has met some of the wittiest and wisest men and women of the day, and the letters she draws upon include also those from Modjeska, Edmund Gosse, Oscar Wilde, "Ouida," W. B. Yeats, and others.

JAPAN'S BEST BRAINS.

1,500 IN LONDON.

According to the Japanese Embassy there are 1,500 young Japanese in London. And every one is an ardent student there in order that he may be an accomplished teacher in Japan.

Few if any of these enterprising Japanese are learning their livelihood in London. They are well provided with funds. They dress well, they join golf and tennis clubs and on the surface they are young men specially chosen for their brains and adaptability to learn all we can teach them in science, commerce, engineering, and trade.

The Japanese are the world's best imitators, and just as they have discovered all Manchester can teach them about cotton and all Bradford knows about wool, and Sheffield about steel, so they are now in London studying our banking system, our methods of running a world trade, our latest experiments in the laboratories.

They are polite, self effacing, adaptable, but they are quietly and systematically absorbing all the best we can teach them, and in a few years they will return to Japan as professors in the great art of imitation.

There is a colony of well-to-do Japanese at Hampstead, where they are known as courteous squires of dames and formidable opponents on the tennis courts, but nobody works harder than these modest young men about town. They are there to learn all that we can teach them in the things that really matter, and their ambition is to return to Japan and beat us at our own game.

SPORT.

ARMY FOOTBALL.

KING'S BATTALION LEAGUE.

The King's Battalion Football League is now in full swing, and as the competition proceeds the interest is increased with every match. Keen, sporting rivalry exists between the 19 teams in the league, and some good football resulted.

Thirteen more matches have been played during the week. Many positions have been altered, but the Machine Gunners "A" still remain undefeated at the top of the league table, and stand a good chance of winning the Regimental Shield. The Drummers, No. 5 and No. 13, are only two points behind the leaders and are still in the running. They can be relied upon to give the Machine Gunners a tough fight for the championship honours.

Following are the week's results:-

WATER POLO.

In the V.R.C. bath the R.G.A. water polo team met a combination from H.M.S. "Carlisle" during the week and defeated them by 4 goals to 1. The score was by no means an indication of the standard of the match, for the Gunners did not have the game all their own way, and were often very hard pressed to keep their goal intact. They have their sound defence to thank for their victory.

GARRISON TENNIS.

No matches in connection with the Garrison Lawn Tennis League have been played during the week on account of the restrictions placed on the Garrison courts at Happy Valley.

GAMBLING QUARREL HAS FATAL ENDING.

Magistrate Fraser yesterday afternoon heard evidence in the case in which a Chinese fisherman of the s.s. "Hosam" was charged with the murder of a fishmonger as the result of a gambling quarrel on board during a voyage from Canton on May 17.

According to Mr. T. M. Hazlerigg, Assistant Crown Solicitor, the affair occurred on board after the fish attendants had finished their mid-day meal. A quarrel arose apparently over a gambling debt between the accused man and the deceased. After the quarrel the defendant went towards the crew's quarters. What exactly happened there was not clear to the Crown but the defendant, in a statement to the police, said that he was chased by the fisherman and, in self defence, he stabbed the man in the back.

Dr. Valentine, of the Government Civil Hospital, said one of the wounds was a little to the right of the spine, and the right lung had been punctured. The cause of death in his opinion, was hemorrhage resulting from the punctured lung. An additional cause might have been the inflicting of a wound by an undrawn weapon. The wound was some three inches in depth. It was almost impossible for it to have been inflicted from the front.

After the evidence of eye-witnesses of the affair had been taken, the hearing was adjourned until Monday afternoon.

Mr. W. B. Hind is for the defence, while Mr. R. E. A. Webster is watching the proceedings for an interested party.

ALLEGED ARMED ROBBER ARRESTED.

A fourth man has been apprehended by the Yanmatsi police in connection with the recent armed robbery committed at No. 207, Reclamation Street. He was arrested in Temple Street at 9 o'clock last night as the result of information received, and will be charged in due course, after an identification parade has been held. The other three men who were all alleged to have been identified by victims of the robbery, were charged yesterday and remanded for a week.

DISARMAMENT.

ENCOURAGED BY MAGISTRATE.

A Chinese was charged before Magistrate Lindell this morning with the unlawful possession in Chemsayuen village, Mongkok, yesterday, of a revolver loaded in two chambers.

Inspector Willis said that the weapon was found in a basket which the defendant was carrying.

Admitting possession of the weapon the defendant said that it belonged to a friend who had placed it in his charge.

Sentence of 12 months' hard labour was passed.

THREW STONES AT DRIVER.

BUS FARE SHOWS HIS DISPLEASURE.

A Kowloon houseboy, was charged before Magistrate Lindell this morning, with having thrown a stone into a motor bus in Yaumatsi yesterday afternoon.

Inspector Willis said the defendant was riding in a bus when his hat was blown off. He jumped out and covered the hat. When another bus approached, the defendant signalled to it to stop. The driver did not do so because the bus was full. Defendant lost his temper and threw the stone at the driver. Had the stone struck the driver it might have had the effect of making him lose control of the wheel and cause an accident.

A fine of $5 was imposed.

WITCHCRAFT TRIAL.

How deep-rooted superstition remains in some of the Swiss cantons is shown in a case which came before the Appenzell tribunal when a peasant received £10 damages for "moral injury" caused by a neighbouring peasant, who circulated reports accusing him of witchcraft.

It was stated that some time ago a number of the defendant's pigs died mysteriously, and in the witness-box the owner stoutly maintained that, although the plaintiff had never entered his farm, the loss was due undoubtedly to a "curse" which he had put on the animals.

Giving the verdict, the court said that it was high time that steps be taken to rid the country of such harmful superstitions.

KIDNAPPING CHARGE.

MORE EVIDENCE HEARD.

Evidence was heard by Magistrate Lindell yesterday afternoon, in the case in which two Chinese were charged with having been concerned in the kidnapping of Chan Kwai San, the 14-year old son of Mr. L. A. Chan-on, of No. 66, Caine Road.

The first defendant is Cheung Chue Wan, ex-Private Secretary of a former Civil Governor of Canton, who was charged with having instigated and been an accessory to the kidnapping; while the second defendant, Cheung Chue Chin, was charged with the actual kidnapping of the boy.

Mr. G. G. N. Timson prosecuted for Mr. Chan-on. Mr. M. K. Lo appeared for Cheung Chue Wan, Cheung Chue Chin was not defended.

Mr. Timson asked for permission to take the cases against the defendants separately as it was necessary for him to use the evidence of the second defendant against the first.

The case against the second defendant was taken first. He admitted having kidnapped the boy. Formal evidence of his arrest in Macao, and of his subsequently being charged was taken, after which the Magistrate warned the defendant that whatever he might say in the case against the first defendant would have to be given voluntarily by him, and would not in any way influence the Court concerning the charge against him, which would be tried at the Criminal Session next month.

The case against the first defendant, Cheung Chue Wan, was then proceeded with.

Mr. M. K. Lo entered a plea of not guilty.

The second defendant, Cheung Chue Chin, elected to give evidence. He said in the witness box that he was the man who kidnapped the boy Chan Kwai San, and told him to ransom.

Asked to relate the story from the beginning, the witness said that at the beginning of September last year he lived at No. 26, Bonham Road together with the first defendant and a man named Lee Shun Hing. The boy and his parents lived next door at that time. The kidnapping of the boy originated with the first defendant and the man Lee. They supplied the witness with money to cover the expenses of entertaining the boy and gain his confidence. This started in September. The first instalment of $100 was paid to him by the first defendant early in September. He gave the witness another $100 later in the month. On October 8, the witness received another $200 from Lee Shun Hing to take the boy to Macao and keep him there. That same afternoon, at 2 p.m., the witness, the boy, and two other men Ng Ming Po and Chan Kan, who are in the employ of the first defendant and the man Lee, left for Macao by the s.s. "Sui Tai." They stayed two days at a Chinese hotel, and then Chan Kan engaged a boat and they took the boy on board on the pretext of going for a picnic. At 6 p.m., on the 10th, the boat reached Pakshui where they spent the night. At noon the following day they reached Kimo village, and later in the day arrived at Kolan where they landed and the boy was confined in a house in the charge of a man in the employ of Chan Kan.

Handed a copy of a letter which the boy's parents had received, the witness admitted that he had written the original of it which he had signed with his proper name, Cheung Chue Chin, affixed the chop bearing the name of the kidnapping gang, the "Lau Yee Tong" and posted it at Macao on November 1.

The letter read as follows:

I beg to state that, with reference to the suffering of your illustrious son Kwai Sang, it concerns neither Cheung Kam Fong nor his son. How could you conceive such an idea? In fact, he only went on board to bid farewell on account of friendship. At the beginning of the matter the plot was planned and proceeded with by Chan Chu Wan a nephew of Cheung Kam Fong and Li Shun Hing, the co-occupant of the first floor of the house (26, Bonham Road). As regards payment of expenses, Chan, as well as Li, undertook to pay them afterwards. They requested me to entertain your son to travel and drink, so as to allure him to this place. As I am not at enmity with your son and have no grievance against him why should I commit such a wrongful act? Thus you may excuse me. At present your son is enjoying an abundant supply of food and clothing. Please relieve your anxiety concerning him. I beg respectfully to enquire after your general welfare.

(Signed) CHEUNG CHUE CHING.

The further hearing was adjourned to next week.

JAZZ BANDS BANNED.
 Jazz (records a San Francisco Paper) whether it finds its expression through some of the latest dances or in the masterpieces of Tin Pan alley, has been outlawed in Savannah.

Hereafter the saxophone must be content to confine its walls to jazzless music, and a maiden—no matter how pretty she may be—must not twitch her shoulders or direct her feet in any steps that even suggest jazz.

A cop might be listening and watching.

In other words, the City Council doesn't think it's nice to synthesize music or dancing, as shown by its action in passing the Garfunkel ordinance after the city had been up in arms pro and con for the last week.

Mr. Garfunkel says his ordinance is designed "to bar and ban indecent dances and music with immoral sug-gestiveness."

The law, as passed, is as follows:
 "All forms of jazz dancing, as well as all forms of dancing to jazz music or syncretized music at public dance halls or at hotels or at public dances, or in the public streets, be and the same are hereby declared to be unlawful, and are hereby prohibited, as being indecent and injurious to the public morals."

"Any person, firm or corporation violating the provisions of this ordinance, whether as the proprietor of any public dance hall, or pavilion, or other place where such dances are held, or whether as the promoter of any such dances, or whether as a participant in such dances, shall upon conviction before the police court of Savannah, be fined in a sum not exceeding $100 or be imprisoned not exceeding thirty days, either or both, in the discretion of the court."
